

Lab exp 5

→ RIP (Routing Information protocol) is a protocol that routers can use to exchange network topology information. It is characterised as an interior gateway protocol and is typically used in small to medium sized networks.

RIP basically gets the address of the neighbouring routers also so this process repeats in all routers to transfer the memory or the packet to the destination.